Hare lives in a hut in a forest. She sleeps on a bed made out of grass.

Early in the morning when the sun rises, Hare wakes up and gets out of her hut. Hare opens her eyes to see the things around her. She sees beautiful flowers, trees and small insects. Hare says to herself, “Hmmm, my sense of sight is very good.”

In the forest, there are many birds that sing. Hare sits on an anthill with ears wide open to hear the birds sing. Hare says to herself, “Hmm, my sense of hearing is very good. I can hear beautiful bird songs.”

Hare feels her empty stomach groan, she is very hungry. She goes looking for something to eat. From a distance, Hare can smell carrots that are in a garden nearby. The smell of the carrots is always lovely. Hare runs to the garden while saying, “Hmmm, my sense of smell is very good. The carrots smell delicious.”

Hare reaches the garden and pulls a carrot out of the ground. She touches and feels the carrot and says, “Hmmm, my sense of touch is very good. I can feel this carrot is big.”

Hare sits on an anthill and eats the carrot. The carrot tastes delicious. Hare is very happy. She says, “Hmmm, my sense of taste is very good. This carrot tastes sweet.”

Hare's stomach is full and big. She sits on the anthill and sings, "I am happy as happy can be, I can see with my big eyes, I can hear with my long ears, I can smell with my little nose, I can touch with my hairy fingers, I can taste with my red tongue, Oh, I am happy as happy can be."

Now we all know that we have five senses: smell, sight, hearing, taste and touch.
